I was honored to be given the challenge to establish our inaugural National Pavilion and was extremely proud of the efforts and contribution made by the entire team, and our dynamic, artists – all of which was made possible by the strong support given by our government and the Ministry of Culture, Youth and Community Development. We were pioneers representing our country and are delighted and very proud to be recognized by the Government of Italy for our contribution."

Today, the Venice Biennale encompasses the official pavilions of more than 70 nations and is widely recognized as a critically important global event that showcases new and important emerging trends in international contemporary art.

In 2009, the United Arab Emirates was the first Gulf country to participate in the Biennale. Initiated and supported by the Ministry of Culture, Youth and Community Development, the UAE National Pavilion proved to be a big success with over 375,000 visitors; the exhibition enriched the cultural offering at Venice showcasing a unique insight into the modern UAE art scene, artists and artistic practices. The UAE National Pavilion strengthened the long standing commercial ties between the UAE and Italy by enriching the two countries cultural understanding and exposure to the UAE art scene which is fast emerging as a powerful new voice in the world of Arab art.

The UAE National Pavilion also organized an onsite information exchange program with more than 50 dedicated volunteers to ensure that visitors better interacted with the UAE artists and to promote a greater understanding of Emirati culture. The first UAE National Pavilion volunteer program was designed to create a legacy of highly skilled art practitioners in the UAE learning through interaction and exposure to top international artists and curators. Extensively covered by the international press and generating a new awareness of a previously quiet art scene, the UAE Pavilion enjoying positive critique in such prestigious publications as The Wall Street Journal, The Guardian, The New York Times, and The Financial Times but to name a few. The artists and various participants in the UAE Pavilion have all benefitted greatly from the experience and as a result are engaging in a range of new projects both locally and abroad.

The UAE Pavilion was enabled through the support of the Ministry of Culture, Youth and Community Development as well as the sponsorship of the Emirates Foundation and Dubai Culture. The volunteer program was sponsored by Takatof and Emirates Airlines. The first UAE Pavilion at the Venice Biennale was a truly national effort with enthusiastic and positive collaboration with Sharjah Museums, TDIC, Tashkeel, Shelter, many of the privately owned and operated UAE art galleries as well as the artists and individuals engaged in the UAE art scene.
